

How do you want to be remembered by your relatives and friends when you leave this earth? Surprisingly, more than two-thirds (69%) of Americans say they most want to be remembered for the memories they've shared with loved ones,

Most Americans now favor the idea of "giving while living,"

And this is not just financial assets, but the gift of our faith, our spirit, our dreams. This can be a time to reflect on our present in preparation for the future.

Consider trying out our hermitage sometime, where you can have quiet time for prayer and rest and creativity for a few days or up to a month!

How do you want to be remembered?

When someone moves away or dies we often talk about stories we recall, or aspects of their lives. What kind of stories would be told about you? Sometimes it is worthwhile to prepare ourselves and perhaps even consciously create a legacy of not just material things, but also our faith, our values, our personality.

This evening presentation will provide an opportunity to explore how we can plan ahead, and perhaps even prepare how we want others to think about us.
